I think what the deal is, is that they incorporate the rest of the classes into the nursing classes, hitting upon them very lightly and covering just what is needed in relation to nursing. But I'm positive that there are only 3 actual classes needed to apply to the program, and get accepted. I looked in the catalogs I have around here just to make sure, and here it is BIOL 2420, 2401, and 2402; micro, A&P I, A&P II. I know I am late in responding to this subject, but I had to put in my South Carolina info!! I have been taking summer school Micro the past several weeks, so this is the first chance I've had to do much of anything besides study. I go to Univ of South Carolina at Spartanburg. We have an ADN and BSN program. The ADN has quite a few pre-reqs, but I chose it because I already have a bachelors degree and, therefore, was able to transfer a lot of these. Ultimately, allowing me to graduate quicker. Our nursing school also has an RN
