

---

my future job test Have any of you had DVA completely ignore outside medical and personal records?

Posted by val - 2010/02/19 00:19

---

Hi, I am new. I was wondering if anyone had VA completely ignore and stonewall you concerning outside medical/psych and personal statements based on incorrect documentation in your military medical records. An example is one doc in military said was from Phili and went on to say my condition pre-existed the military and I was in Western Psych prior to the service. First off I am from Pgh not Philly and second Western Psych didn't even treat my condition at the time they claim I was there let alone it was on the other side of the state from Philly where he said I was from. I eventually got proof from that hospital that states I was NEVER treated there and the records do go back that far and buddy statements from about 6 people that I never had this problem prior to the service. Then I had a GI doctor volunteer to look at my records and he said that it was a result of neglecting to treat and even diagnose my condition. Psych docs (3) have linked my current problems to the military as well. Then when I go for C&P's they fall right back to the original diagnosis based on what the doc said in the military. How do you get VA to recognize all these doctors and statements that negates everything the ONE C&P doctor had to say. P.S. Sorry for the caps in a couple places I wanted to underline but that is all I could think of to make the words stand out. Val

=====

my future job test Have any of you had DVA completely ignore outside medical and personal records?

Posted by Jim Strickland - 2010/02/19 00:19

---

stonewall you concerning outside medical/psych and personal statements based on incorrect documentation in your military medical records. An example is one doc in military said was from Phili and went on to say my condition pre-existed the military and I was in Western Psych prior to the service. First off I am from Pgh not Philly and second Western Psych didn't even treat my condition at the time they claim I was there let alone it was on the other side of the state from Philly where he said I was from. I eventually got proof from that hospital that states I was NEVER treated there and the records do go back that far and buddy statements from about 6 people that I never had this problem prior to the service. Then I had a GI doctor volunteer to look at my records and he said that it was a result of neglecting to treat and even diagnose my condition. Psych docs (3) have linked my current problems to the military as well. Then when I go for C&P's they fall right back to the original diagnosis based on what the doc said in the military. How do you get VA to recognize all these doctors and statements that negates everything the ONE C&P doctor had to say. P.S. Sorry for the caps in a couple places I wanted to underline but that is all I could think of to make the words stand out. Val

=====

my future job test Have any of you had DVA completely ignore outside medical and personal records?

Posted by Valerie Cortazzo - 2010/02/19 00:19

---

Hi, I am new. I was wondering if anyone had VA completely ignore and stonewall you concerning outside medical/psych and personal statements based on incorrect documentation in your military medical records. An example is one doc in military said was from Phili and went on to say my condition pre-existed the military and I was in Western Psych prior to the service. First off I am from Pgh not Philly and second Western Psych didn't even treat my condition at the time they claim I was there let alone it was on the other side of the state from Philly where he said I was from. I eventually got proof from that hospital that states I was NEVER treated there and the records do go back that far and buddy statements from about 6 people that I never had this problem prior to the service. Then I had a GI doctor volunteer to look at my records and he said that it was a result of neglecting to treat and even diagnose my condition. Psych docs (3) have linked my current problems to the military as well. Then when I go for C&P's they fall right back to the original diagnosis based on what the doc said in the military. How do you get VA to recognize all these doctors and statements that negates everything the ONE C&P doctor had to say. P.S. Sorry for the caps in a couple places I wanted to underline but that is all I could think of to make the words stand out. Val

=====

my future job test Have any of you had DVA completely ignore outside medical and personal records?

Posted by Jim Strickland - 2010/02/19 00:19

---

---

Hi, I am new. I was wondering if anyone had VA completely ignore and stonewall you concerning outside medical/psych and personal statements based on incorrect documentation in your military medical records. An example is one doc in military said was from Phili and went on to say my condition pre-existed the military and I was in Western Psych prior to the service. First off I am from Pgh not Philly and second Western Psych didn't even treat my condition at the time they claim I was there let alone it was on the other side of the state from Philly where he said I was from. I eventually got proof from that hospital that states I was NEVER treated there and the records do go back that far and buddy statements from about 6 people that I never had this problem prior to the service. Then I had a GI doctor volunteer to look at my records and he said that it was a result of neglecting to treat and even diagnose my condition. Psych docs (3) have linked my current problems to the military as well. Then when I go for C&P's they fall right back to the original diagnosis based on what the doc said in the military. How do you get VA to recognize all these doctors and statements that negates everything the ONE C&P doctor had to say. P.S. Sorry for the caps in a couple places I wanted to underline but that is all I could think of to make the words stand out.
Val

=====

my future job test Have any of you had DVA completely ignore outside medical and personal records?

Posted by Wendi Goodman - 2010/02/19 00:19

---

Hi, I am new. I was wondering if anyone had VA completely ignore and stonewall you concerning outside medical/psych and personal statements based on incorrect documentation in your military medical records. An example is one doc in military said was from Phili and went on to say my condition pre-existed the military and I was in Western Psych prior to the service. First off I am from Pgh not Philly and second Western Psych didn't even treat my condition at the time they claim I was there let alone it was on the other side of the state from Philly where he said I was from. I eventually got proof from that hospital that states I was NEVER treated there and the records do go back that far and buddy statements from about 6 people that I never had this problem prior to the service. Then I had a GI doctor volunteer to look at my records and he said that it was a result of neglecting to treat and even diagnose my condition. Psych docs (3) have linked my current problems to the military as well. Then when I go for C&P's they fall right back to the original diagnosis based on what the doc said in the military. How do you get VA to recognize all these doctors and statements that negates everything the ONE C&P doctor had to say. P.S. Sorry for the caps in a couple places I wanted to underline but that is all I could think of to make the words stand out. Val

=====

my future job test Have any of you had DVA completely ignore outside medical and personal records?

Posted by Valerie Cortazzo - 2010/02/19 00:19

---

Hi, I am new. I was wondering if anyone had VA completely ignore and stonewall you concerning outside medical/psych and personal statements based on incorrect documentation in your military medical records. An example is one doc in military said was from Phili and went on to say my condition pre-existed the military and I was in Western Psych prior to the service. First off I am from Pgh not Philly and second Western Psych didn't even treat my condition at the time they claim I was there let alone it was on the other side of the state from Philly where he said I was from. I eventually got proof from that hospital that states I was NEVER treated there and the records do go back that far and buddy statements from about 6 people that I never had this problem prior to the service. Then I had a GI doctor volunteer to look at my records and he said that it was a result of neglecting to treat and even diagnose my condition. Psych docs (3) have linked my current problems to the military as well. Then when I go for C&P's they fall right back to the original diagnosis based on what the doc said in the military. How do you get VA to recognize all these doctors and statements that negates everything the ONE C&P doctor had to say. P.S. Sorry for the caps in a couple places I wanted to underline but that is all I could think of to make the words stand out.
Val

=====

my future job test Have any of you had DVA completely ignore outside medical and personal records?

Posted by americal196 - 2010/02/19 00:19

---

---

Hi, I am new. I was wondering if anyone had VA completely ignore and stonewall you concerning outside medical/psych and personal statements based on incorrect documentation in your military medical records. An example is one doc in military said was from Phila and went on to say my condition pre-existed the military and I was in Western Psych prior to the service. First off I am from Pgh not Philly and second Western Psych didn't even treat my condition at the time they claim I was there let alone it was on the other side of the state from Philly where he said I was from. I eventually got proof from that hospital that states I was NEVER treated there and the records do go back that far and buddy statements from about 6 people that I never had this problem prior to the service. Then I had a GI doctor volunteer to look at my records and he said that it was a result of neglecting to treat and even diagnose my condition. Psych docs (3) have linked my current problems to the military as well. Then when I go for C&P's they fall right back to the original diagnosis based on what the doc said in the military. How do you get VA to recognize all these doctors and statements that negates everything the ONE C&P doctor had to say. P.S. Sorry for the caps in a couple places I wanted to underline but that is all I could think of to make the words stand out.

Val

=====